Microscope History

"Where the telescope ends, the microscope begins. Which of the two has a grander view?" – Victor Hugo

Way back in the day, people didn't know that microscopic organisms existed. It was until someone looked through a piece of transparent crystal that was thicker at the middle than around the edges did they realize that magnification could occur. Several hundred years later, the father and son team of Zacharias and Hans Janssen experimented with a couple of lenses and a tube and discovered the notion of a "compound" microscope. The true father of microscopy though was Anton Van Leeuwenhoek. He created the first light microscope and was the first to describe bacteria, yeast cells, the microscopic life in a droplet of water, and the circulation of blood corpuscles in capillaries. While looking at a slice of cork under a microscope, Robert Hooke noticed that the tiny "compartments" of the cork resembled the barren walls of a monk's room in a monastery, thus calling the structures "cells." He confirmed Leeuwenhoek's findings and improved upon his compound light microscope. There is so much about the world we wouldn't know if it weren't for the invention of the microscope.
